

He Lives To Run Another Day

A few days ago, the Duke of Beaufort's hounds had a most extraordinary run. After a good chase they ran a fox to the village of Grittleton, Wilts, but could not catch it. They had to give up, and after they left the village, Reynard was seen disporting himself on the roof of the Rev. H. K. Baldero's residence. He was watched on the housetop for a long time, but on a newsman passing along and blowing his horn, Reynard quickly left his place of refuge and made for Sir John Neeld's cover, and will undoubtedly furnish the hunt with another day's sport at some future occasion.

Western Gazette, 8 December 1871

